Structing Glassware. To select glass with discretion it is necessary to understand somewhat of its manufacture and to recall the properties of the chemicals of which it is composed. These materials are chiefly sods, potash, lime, alumina and oxide of lead. The quality of the glass to be manufactured depends upon the amount of the basic material united with the silica or sand. The best glass is made with lead, which gives to it luster, fusibility and high refractory powers. It is often called fint glass to distinguish it from lime glass, which is much cheaper and of a decidedly greenish tint.

Flint giass is that which is most generally used for cutting and polishing. It may be picked out by the clear, belllike tone which it sends forth when struck. This test may be made without any danger of breaking the glass if it be held firmly in one hand while the apper part or edge is sharply struck with a pencil or other instrument, the only care requisite being to see that the glass does not touch any object when it is struck, since if there be room for it to vibrate glass will never break .-Harper's Bazar.
